"It is expected that the questions of the constitutionality of the disfranchising amendment to the West Virginia Constitution, will be decided by Chief Justice Chase at the present term of the United States Court here. MONDAY MORNING, AUGUST 17. To Correspondents .- No commun ation not accompanied by the name of the writer can appear in these columns. Gov. Stanton's Speech. We print this morning, in two divilons, the little speech made last Wednesday night by Gov. Stanton, at Washington Hall. We have never en propositions in brief terms more plainly, more logically and unanswerbly stated. We trust every reader who eruses this paragraph will turn to the overnor's remarks and read them carefully and thoughtfully.

The Short Cut to Bankruptcy. In Gov. Stanton's remarks upon the proposition to convert the bonded debt nto greenbacks, printed elsewhere, he traces the consequences of that act no further than to show that if it were an absolute certainty that the greenbacks ould be redeemed in gold at the end of twenty years, they could be worth at the time of conversion nd more than 25 cents on the dollar, because the present value of any note without interest, due at a future day, is just that sum which placed at compound interest would proluce the face of the note when due. As a matter of fact, however, if the two verted into greenbacks they would not not remain worth anything. A greenpromise of the Government to pay when the Government pleases or finds tself in a condition to pay. It must be mpossible for the Government to re-(unded), in other words to resume troversies and in whose decision specie payment, until business is gradestored to ordinary channels, until the country has recovered from gains in wealth and the consequent ains in wealth and the consequent it and declaring the result. It is an absolute necessity, if you do not intended that this Government shall be seen to be absoluted that the control of growth of confidence appreciate the commerce. Of course it is only the prospect of redemption in money that gives these notes any value at all. Supof them were thrown upon the country, what would be the probabilities of their payment, and what would they be worth? What could the country do with two thousand millions of irre- with two thousand millions of irrewith two thousand millions of irredeemable paper? It would be payable he says this: that "if Congress, in dewhen the Government might please.
The Government would have already repudiated its contract to pay interest on its debt, that being a larger sum which the new rebellion is to be raised. on its debt, that being a larger sum many times over if the debt ran fifteen or twenty years than the present worth of this paper if its payment were assured at the end of a like period—and might it not with equal facility repudiate the contract to redeem this paper at all? But at best, such a vast amount all? But at best, such a vast amount counsed. And if, taking their count, of currency, by the inexorable selfacting principle that money cheapens as it is multiplied, would send prices of everything else up like a rocket-or speaking with more accuracy; would bring the value of currency down like

An instant realization of the evils to follow the launching of five times the present volume of this greenback currency upon the country, and an apprehension of other calamitics not clearly foreseen, would create a panic that would overturn the business of the country even before the issue took place. The securities now, by virtue of the confidence felt that they will be paid, represent, and practically have, a money value. Every branch of business in the country rests on them, as in ordinary times it rests on a basis of specie. Their conversion in the way proposed would operate as the total destruction of money value to their amount; and what then could happen but that the whole fabric of commerce and business in every ramification would tumble into ruin? With the best intentions, the Government could not redeem its paper without heavy taxation. The destruction of the securities and the substitution of irredeem able non-interest-bearing paper would, even before the act took place, so oripple the country that payment of taxes would be lost; so that, cause and consequences alike conspiring to deepen the depression, there could be but one result. Everything would go to the bottom; all paper money would become wholly worthless, and universal bankruptey overtake both Government and people. In this condition we should be at the mercy of foreign pow An instant realization of the axils to follow the launching of five times the sal bankruptcy overtake both Government and people. In this condition we should be at the mercy of foreign powers that might, and very likely would, improve the opportunity to enforce the claims of foreign creditors by such measures as would add immeasurably to the national suffering and humiliation.

A FEW PLAIN PROPOSITIONS

In anticipation of the decision, an interested party there wrote as follows low, when your creditor comes to you, to say:
"Certainly I am ready to pay my ond."

"What will you pay it in?"
"I will give you a new note."
"Well what will you pay the note in? When that comes due will you give me another note? What is it ultimately to be paid in?"

Now, if this Government owes two deems them with two thousand millions of greenbacks, will it owe any less? It will have given two million of new notes for precisely the same amount of other notes. And how are the new notes to be paid? I do not see that you have reduced your debt any. You have delayed the day of payment, that is all. Chief Justice Chase, in delivering the opinion of the court, in substance said: "No court of the United States will decide the question as to the validity of the amendment to the Constitution of "O, but," says the party, "we will get rid of the interest."

West Virginia under the Constitution and laws of said State. and laws of said State.

"We think the amendment fairly reconcilable with the Constitution and laws of the United States. The word citizen, as used in the amendment, is not in the sense of that word as used in the judiciary acts—but that certain individuals should not be regarded as citizens, that is, shall not partake of the political powers of citizens.

"The word citizen, as used in the judiciary act, is not in the sense of a political person."

Now then, gentlemen, no more of Now, will that do amongst honest men? I have Capt. McLure's note for men? I have Capt. McLure's note for a thousand dollars, bearing interest at six per cent. He comes to me and says: "I want to pay you. I will give you a new note payable in twenty years, with-out interest." Now if he has power npel me to take it, and do pel me, is not he a scoundrel? [Ap

If you propose to redeem your greenbacks by the accumulated and surplus "The word citizen, as used in the judiciary act, is not in the sense of a political person."

Now then, gentlemen, no more of your rant, if you please, about the unconstitutionality of the 'disfranchising clause of our State Constitution. You raised the question before the highest judicial authority and you have got your answer. The Chief Justice tells your answer. The Chief Justice tells you he provision is "fairly reconcilable with the Constitution and laws of the United States." Henceforth such men as Colonel Ben Smith, who go about the State preaching the unconstitutionality of disfranchising rebels and advising people to resist it by force have not even the lame justification of a doubt on the subject. That question is settled; so these fellows will have to get up a howl about something else.

Democratic Mobocracy in St. Louis The Missouri Democrat of last Friday gives the following account of a Democratic mob in St. Louis attempting to prevent the Radical candidate for Gov

jamin Stanton said:

There is, beyond all question, a contemplation on the part of the Democracy of the South, that is participated in here, that if they are defeated in this election, we are to have a little more blood letting. I want to call your attention to one or two propositions in this connection.

You can have no peace, no order, no protection to persons and property, unless you have a Government that has power to decide all controverted questions, and where all the people are bound to abide by its decisions. There will, in every government and in every country, be constantly arising controverted questions about which the people will differ. It is therefore a matter of imperative and overruling necessity ernor from speaking in that city: Hon, J. W. McClurg, the Radical candidate for Governor, arrived in town yesterday. The Young Men's Republi-can Club, no notice being possible through the papers, gathered a consid-erable number of its members and proceeded to serende him at the Planters' House last night. A large crowd assembled, of whom many were copperheads and rebels, and the scene which followed was simply disgraceful to the city, and disgraceful to the contemptible sneaks who made the disturbance. vided by the constitution and laws of ble sneaks who made the disturbance. Colonel McClurg was constantly interrupted, during his address, with the conrest and most vulgar blackguardism, yells, hoots, shouts for opponents, and every form of annoyance and insult to which a mob of loafers could resort to provent decent people from hearing what he had to say. Packs of fire-crackers were lighted and thrown into the crowd; combined efforts were made by prolonged yelling to break up the meeting, and at one time, when a Seymour flag was thrown out from an upper window of the Plauters' House, the noise provides for the mode of casting the mere Mexican affair and degenerate into sheer anarchy, if you do not in-tend that all Presidential elections longed yelling to break up the meeting, and at one time, when a Seymour flag was thrown out from an upper window of the Planters' House, the noise drowned everything for several minutes. The flag was finally pulled down, and the mob, after making all the disturbance they could for nearly an hour, became so far diminished in number that the meeting was finished in comparative order. Nevertheless, while General Pile was speaking the same outrageous disturbance was frequently repeated, and one man actually draw a pistol and pointed it at him, but was seen and seized by the crowd before he could fire it. It is well that he was arrested and locked up by the police, who made creditable efforts to stop the disturbance, and several other persons—among them a proprietor of the Times named Hodnett—were locked up in the calaboose for their outrageous conduct.
